

Preserving the History and Legacy of Livingston College

Thu, Jul 2, 2009 at 11:01 AM

For all of us who attended Livingston College, we came away with unique memories and perspectives that in ways large and small impacted our lives, as well as the lives of people in the business, civic, and social communities. It is so vitally important that the history of Livingston College be preserved, particularly at a time when the Class of 2010 will be the last to graduate with Livingston degrees. Unfortunately, much of Livingston's history is not in written form or not organized in ways that can easily be accessed online or preserved.

As part of our Livingston Legacy programs, we will keep you posted on plans to preserve our college's history and how you can help as a volunteer or contributor. Here's one way that you can easily help: Do you have any pictures from your college years? Please send them to laemail@gmail.com with the year the picture was taken, who was in the picture, and any information about the event or program where the photo was taken. We will be posting the photos on the Livingston Alumni Association website as a way to start building a visual history of Livingston. Any photos - from your Quad/Tower dorm, classroom, student club, programs, and events - are welcome!

Next month, we will be announcing details about two more Livingston Legacy programs:

- a panel discussion in April 2010 about the history of the Journalism program at Livingston
- the opportunity to obtain Livingston yearbooks from the college's early years, with funds to go towards the Livingston Legacy campaign.

Finally, if you have recently celebrated a family milestone - birthday, wedding, new job, addition to your family - please share with information with Alyssa Roberts via email at lys\_rob@yahoo.com. Alyssa is the new Livingston class correspondent for Rutgers Magazine and is looking for news about Livingston alumni to put into her column.

Thanks so much for your help and support.

Best wishes,
